Residential: Service provider agencies own or rent houses and apartments in the community, typically with 3-4 people with developmental disabilities living together. The agencies provide a full range of supports to help people learn and perform activities of daily living, participate in their communities, and live as independently as possible.

Self-Directed Services: Individuals with developmental disabilities and their families have control over their individualized budget and manage their own supports, including hiring their own staff. Supports can assist the person with any aspect of daily life and work.

Community Supported Living Arrangements (CSLA): These services provide a full range of community- based supports to assist people to live in their own house, apartment, or family home. The provider agency does not own or rent the home, but does provide a full range of community supports.

Day Services: Day programs provide individuals with learning/work experience necessary to reach maximum independent functioning or provide work skills necessary to enter the workforce.

Supported Employment: Supports may include job skills training, job development, vocational assessment, and ongoing job coaching support necessary for people to obtain and maintain work in the community.

Family Support Services: A wide array of services provided to families with children under the age of 22 living at home. The services assist the family so the child with a disability can be adequately cared for at home and include, but are not limited to: respite care, in-home assistance, advocacy, adaptive equipment, parent support groups, and transportation assistance.

Individual Support Services: These services are for adults living with family or on their own. Examples include transportation, environmental modifications, adaptive equipment, money management, and support to learn and complete daily living and home skills.
